Sephardic music: a century of recordings

Title: Sephardic music: a century of recordings

Description:
Focusing on the music of the Jewish community that has family origins in the Iberian Peninsula, the Sephardic Music website showcases recorded Sephardic music, from around 1906, when commercial recording of Sephardic music began, to the present day. The 'Appendices' section of the website includes a bibliography, and consists of an extensive discography, which is browsable by label, song, and artist. There are three other sections to the website that provide background information and material about Sephardic music: 78 RPMs, which includes details about the first recordings; early repertoire, about the performance of Sephardic music; and modern recordings, which includes information about the folk revival, as well as Sephardic music in Spain, Turkey and Israel. Throughout the website it is possible to listen to sound samples of the music that is described. Although the website was created by an independent researcher, he was given a lot of support (financial or otherwise) from a number of educational institutions, including the Jewish Music Research Centre in Jerusalem, and the Judaica Sound Archives at Florida Atlantic University.

Keywords - controlled: music; musicians; Judaism; sound recordings; Jewish Music Research Centre; Florida Atlantic University. Judaica Sound Archives;

Keywords - uncontrolled: Jewish; Jew; Sephardic; Sephardi

Type: Research related resources; Sound;